

ABSTRACT

A battery charger includes an element for connecting to the unit, the battery of which is to be charged. The charge parameters are variable. The connection element is removable from the charger, and it includes an arrangement, such as a resistor in the connection element outside the charger, providing automatic determination of the electrical parameter(s) for the charge upon connecting the unit to the charger via the connection element.